Cannabis, also known as marijuana, is the most widely used illegal substance in the world. This illegal habit has escalated in recent years, with cannabis a constant in the headlines. It has been declared by many countries to be a harmful, addictive and addictive drug. The scientific community is fast becoming divided over whether it's good or bad. The legality of cannabis has been a contentious subject for the past 40 years. Most countries in Europe would not prosecute a person for simple possession of cannabis. Some governments, such as those in France, Germany, Portugal, Spain and the Netherlands, have had a relaxed attitude to their use. The typical approach in most other countries, however, has been to criminalise cannabis and make it illegal. The Canadian government still stands by its decision to legalize the use of cannabis in its country. Canada's Parliament began debating the national legalization of cannabis on October 17, 2017. This debate included recreational use, medical use and decriminalisation of cannabis.

Marijuana - A Harmful Drug? The campaign to decriminalise the use of cannabis has been in full swing for several years. Legal
